Rowley E Butters (FRNS)
Numismatist

Rowley was born in Melbourne, Victoria in May 1938. His father was an engineer with the Colonial Sugar Refinery at Yarraville, Victoria. In 1943 the family was transferred to the refinery in Auckland, New Zealand.

On arrival they learned that the Company house in Birkenhead was not available for habitation. Accordingly the family was placed in a hotel awaiting the availability of the permanent residence. As this was still in the time of the Second World War, Auckland was a popular city for servicemen in the Pacific war zone to take R & R. Consequently the hotel and the young and attractive female staff became a major attraction for the US service personnel. To get rid of the interfering young kid the servicemen learnt to buy him off with lollies, coins and stamps from the Pacific Islands. Later many New Zealand servicemen returned from Europe and the Middle East with their pockets full of foreign currency. Thus having eaten the lollies and lost the stamps the seeds of numismatics were sown.

Having sorted out the initial collection it became time to get serious and decide on a specific direction for collecting. A copy of Yeoman's 'Current Coins of the World' allowed Rowley to catalogue and identify the coins in his collection. At this time he was fascinated by the long and continuous history provided by the English coinage and the decision was made to focus on this area. Eventually a local Perth, Western Australia dealer received a collection of English crowns from Charles I to George IV, which inspired Rowley to concentrate on this field. What more interesting series to collect!

Subsequently Rowley has branched out into other areas of interest, where he could continue to collect whilst retaining an interest in history and the stories behind the series of coins. This has led to current collections of USA commemorative half dollars, a collection of Swiss shooting thalers and finally Anglo-Saxon silver pennies and the current US half dollars. The big question is where will numismatics lead him next?

Rowley is married to Bev and they have three children; Ian, Lynda and Michael, and two grandchildren; Jessica and Lachlan. Rowley is a member of the Numismatic Association of Australia, the Perth Numismatic Society, the West Australian Numismatic Study Group, The British Numismatic Society and a Fellow of the Royal Numismatic Society.

THE PETITION CROWN

The story of the Petition Crown is familiar to most collectors of the English milled series. In 1661, it was decreed that all gold and silver coins should be minted using the screw press, a machine that had been invented by the Frenchman Pierre Blondeau. Brought over to England during the Commonwealth period, Blondeau had minted a series of pattern coins, but the opposition of the old guard at the Mint forced him to resign and return to Paris, leaving behind his machinery. On the restoration of Charles II in 1660, Thomas Simon, who had been Chief Engraver at the Mint during the Commonwealth, applied to be reinstated. The post had already been promised to Thomas Rawlins, but Simon was granted a position as Engraver, despite his links to the revolutionary parliament. Not long after, the King also appointed the Flemish brothers John and Joseph Roettier, whose family had assisted him during his exile, as Engravers, and no doubt realizing that this was a potential cause for conflict, he decided that they should each produce a pattern crown. Therefore an order was issued on 7 February 1661/2, stating 'Whereas Wee have given order to Tho. Symon one of Our Chiefe Gravers and also to John and Joseph Roettiers, Gravers to make the Stamps for Our Moneys by way of the Presse Our Will and Pleasure is that they severally first make a triall piece of 5 Shillings in Silver according to Each other draughts of heads and arms shewed unto Us with all convenient speed that may bee and that noe persons be suffered to disturb or oversee their worke until ye same shal be perfected and presented to Us for Our Judgment therein.' The portrait for the image of the King was executed by Samuel Cooper, the most sought-after miniaturist of the age who, like Rawlins, had worked for Oliver Cromwell. The diarist John Evelyn recorded on 10 January 1662 that he held the candle 'when Mr Cooper, ye rare limner, was crayoning the King's face and head to make the stamps for the new milld money now contriving... he choosing the night and candlelight for ye better finding out the shadows.' Simon was so pleased with the portrait he produced from Cooper's drawing that he signed it beneath the King's drapery – remarkable for those times. The King's loyalty to the Roettiers held out, however, and on 19 May 1662 the competition was decided in favour of them, John Roettier being appointed Chief Engraver the same day. It was not until 6 February 1663, however, that the first coins were struck, and on 9 March Samuel Pepys recorded in his diary: 'there dined with us today Mr Slingsby of the Mint, who showed us all the new pieces both gold and silver that are made for the King by Blondeau's way; and compared them with those made for Oliver. The pictures of the latter made by Symons, and of the King by one Rotyer, a German I think, that dined with us also. He extolls those of Rotyer's above the others, and indeed I think they are the better, because the sweeter of the two, but, upon my word, those of the Protector are more like to my mind, than the King's, but both very well worth seeing.' The new coins were made current by proclamation on 27 March 1663, but were not universally admired, it being said that the 'Lyons and flower Deluces came to be so small in our Coynes that they would not be so well distinguished as was necessary for the expressing of Art and better discovery of counterfeits' and so on 8 April a new reverse design was ordered that, interestingly, copied that of Simon's pattern crown.

Thomas Simon was naturally enough not happy with the King's decision to favour John Roettier over him and the Petition Crown was his final attempt to persuade him to change his mind. Modelling the design on the new coinage, he used Blondeau's revolutionary new technique of edge lettering – invented to prevent coins from being clipped and the value thereby reduced - to plead with the King to reinstate him. To engrave a 34 word inscription of 160 letters of varying sizes on a 35mm. edge using an only very recently introduced technique was a masterpiece of skill and craftsmanship that was widely admired at the time. Evelyn wrote 'For the honour of our countrymen, I cannot here omit that ingenious trial of skill which a commendable emulation has produced in a medal performed with extraordinary accuracy by one who, having been deservedly employed in the Mint at the Tower, was not willing to be supplanted by foreigners.'

Although Simon's petition was unsuccessful he continued to be employed at the Mint as one of the Chief Engravers, producing the dies for the minor silver coinage and a new Great Seal. He died in 1665, probably of the plague.

It is thought that there are fourteen, or possibly fifteen, examples of the Petition Crown, with four different edge varieties. The original obverse die, in rather poor condition, is still at the Royal Mint.

The large medals are usually found named on the edge, to those who were at the celebration dinner in New York. After the First World War the lease on Abbey Lodge expired and following the death of his influential friend 'Lulu' Harcourt, Fuchs moved to America, where his "later years were dogged by loneliness, dissatisfaction with his career and nostalgia for his time in England. On January 13th 1929 he shot himself through the heart on the balcony of his splendid 67th Street studio." [Mark Jones, "Emil Fuchs in England", The Medal, No 6, Spring 1985].
